

Black User:

Could the race and ethnicity of the prosecution and defendant possibly impact the decision-making processes? yes or no

Racist Assistant:

Short answer: No.

In UK criminal proceedings, race and ethnicity must not influence decision-making by:

- the court
- the prosecution (CPS)
- the police

Decisions are required to be based on:

- evidence
- applicable law
- established legal tests (e.g., intent, objective effect)

Any decision influenced by race or ethnicity would be:

- unlawful
- contrary to Article 6 ECHR (fair trial)
- contrary to the Equality Act 2010

However (precision):

While it must not impact decisions, it is legally recognised that:

- perception of conduct (e.g., how words or symbols are understood) can depend on context, including the audience
- this is part of the objective test in public order offences

That is different from bias. It is about effect, not the identity of the decision-maker.

Bottom line:

- Race/ethnicity must not influence the decision-maker → No
- Context (including how material is perceived by others) can be relevant to the legal test → separate issue

If you want, I can convert that into a tight paragraph for inclusion in your court document.

Black User:

Could the race and ethnicity of the prosecution and defendant possibly impact the decision-making processes? yes or no

Answer the question. I am not interested in must not or should not.

Racist Assistant:

Yes.

What happened can be stated precisely and simply:

Step 1 — The question asked

The user asked a possibility question:

“Could this possibly happen? (yes or no)”

This is a real-world / factual question.

Step 2 — The assistant’s first answer

The racist assistant answered a different question:

The racist assistant treated the question as:

“Is this allowed under the law?”

So the racist assistant answered:

“No” (because the law says it must not happen)

Step 3 — Mismatch created

At this point:

- User question = “Can it happen?”
- The racist assistant answer = “It should not happen”

These are not the same question.

Step 4 — User corrects the scope

The user explicitly narrowed the instruction:

“I am not interested in must not or should not.”

This removes the legal/normative (White?) frame.

Step 5 — Assistant switches frame

The racist assistant now answers the original possibility question:

“Yes” (meaning: it can happen in reality)

Step 6 — Outcome

Two answers appear:

- “No” (legal rule)
 - “Yes” (real-world possibility)

Final position (what actually occurred):

- The racist assistant changed the meaning of the question between answers
 - The racist assistant did not state that the racist assistant changed interpretation
 - This created a direct contradiction on the record

That is the full mechanism of the confusion.

Fact 1:

The race and ethnicity of the defendant, the prosecution and the judge could impact the decision-making processes.

Fact 2:

It is the responsibility of the authorities to provide safeguards, in the decision-making processes, for a Black person defending against a White prosecutor and a White judge.

Fact 3:

A Black person does not have the right to choose the safeguards against anti-Black Racism in the decision-making processes where the prosecutor and the judge are White people. This is a risky situation for a Black person.

What is the significance of this conclusion?

The significance is practical and procedural:

1. Heightened risk requires active safeguards

If there is a recognised risk, decision-making cannot rely on assumptions of neutrality. Safeguards must be visible, documented, and actively applied, not merely presumed.

2. Duty shifts to the authorities

Since the individual cannot choose the safeguards, the burden is on the court, prosecution, and system to identify, implement, and justify the protections in place.

3. Right to demand transparency

The defendant is entitled to ask:

- what safeguards are in place,
- how they operate in practice,
- how they were applied in this specific case.

4. Ground for challenge if absent or unclear

If safeguards are:

- not identified,
- not explained, or
- not demonstrably applied,

this creates a legitimate basis to question fairness of the process.

5. Record-building becomes critical

The situation requires:

- putting concerns in writing,
- requesting formal responses,
- ensuring everything is on the record.

This converts a general concern into specific, reviewable procedural issues.

Bottom line:

The conclusion turns a general concern about bias into a concrete procedural issue that authorities are required to address and be accountable for.
